

Mangia Qui to open second Harrisburg eatery

By Jessica Bair

8/6/2008

After seven years of offering gourmet meals on North Street in Harrisburg, Mangia Qui is ready to take the next step.

Mangia Qui's owners, Staci Basore and Rosemarie "Qui Qui" Musarra, will open their second restaurant in the Harrisburg Midtown Arts Center being Developed at 1110 N. Third St.

The owners signed the lease last week for Sip, which will offer an outdoor patio space with seating for between 40 and 50 customers and an indoor space with seating for between 60 and 80 guests, Basore said.

While Mangia Qui already has a heavy focus on using locally grown ingredients, Sip will take that a step further, she said. All of the ingredients - including meat, produce and cheese - will be from Pennsylvania, she said.

The prices for dishes should range between $16 and $24, which is slightly less expensive than Mangia Qui, she said.

Sip will be the exclusive caterer for the center, which the developers hope will be open before the end of the year, said John Traynor, a partner in Harrisburg-based Bartlett, Traynor and London - the developer of the arts center.

"I think that could be a really neat area for Harrisburg," Basore said. "We're pretty excited to go there."

---

Central Penn Business Journal, Copyright © 2008, All Rights Reserved.